

Oh dear, is my new car on its last legs?

A few weeks ago, the Co-op was advertising half-price legs of lamb. As all my family love lamb, I set off for the store. I managed to buy the last leg they had, but thinking that I might acquire one or two more at the branch in the next village, I got the car out and drove two miles up the road. I was thrilled to buy two more legs, and carried them proudly to the car, threw them in and set off for home.

As I drove away, I could hear a beeping noise, which got louder as I went on. As it was a fairly new car to me, I didn't know why it was beeping. The beeping got louder and louder. Should I turn up the music as I normally do, or should I stop?

All at once the truth hit me: it was beeping because the passenger seatbelt was not fastened, around my legs of lamb! I threw them onto the floor, and went home 28.
